Many white Americans believe they were all in a line toward a hill with prosperity at the top. But over the past few years, globalization and income stagnation have caused the line to stop moving.

And from their perspective, usurpers— black and brown Americans, women and immigrants — are now cutting in the line, because they're getting new (and more equal) opportunities through new anti-discrimination laws and policies like affirmative action.

+ “You are patiently standing in a long line” for something you call the American dream. You are white, Christian, of modest means, and getting along in years. You are male. There are people of color behind you, and “in principle you wish them well.” But you’ve waited long, worked hard, “and the line is barely moving.”

Then “Look! You see people cutting in line ahead of you!” Who are these interlopers? “Some are black,” others “immigrants, refugees.” They get affirmative action, sympathy and welfare — “checks for the listless and idle.” The government wants you to feel sorry for them. And who runs the government? “The biracial son of a low-income single mother,” and he’s cheering on the line cutters. “The president and his wife are line cutters themselves.” The liberal media mocks you as racist or homophobic. Everywhere you look, “you feel betrayed.”

Role of the TEA Party in American Politics

The-Latest.com, July 15, 2010

Folks seek a comfort zone, attempting to re-create, to the best of their abilities and recollections, a time and circumstances when they believe they understood their lives, things made sense to them and when they felt they had the most control.

Speaker of the House John Boehner, on Obama's agenda: "We're going to do everything — and I mean everything we can do — to kill it, stop it, slow it down, whatever we can."

Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell summed up his plan to National Journal: "The single most important thing we want to achieve is for President Obama to be a one-term president."

“There will be no compromise on stopping runaway spending, deficits and debt. There will be no compromise on repealing Obamacare,” said Rep. Mike Pence (R-Ind.) in an interview last week on conservative Hugh Hewitt’s radio show (Oct 2010).

“There will be no compromise on stopping Democrats from growing government and raising taxes,” added Pence, who may leave the House GOP leadership to prepare for a presidential run.

Rates of worry have a strong and significant positive association with Trump's vote share, but this is offset by high levels of relatedness.

Together, these two results imply that racial voting behavior in 2016 was driven by a desire for in-group affiliation as a way of buffering against economic and cultural anxiety.

+ Undoing everything Barack Obama did

The Politics of Spite

JULY 6, 2018 / JOHN PAVLOVITZ

I hear a familiar refrain lately regarding this Presidency, which by most objective evaluations is one of the most corrupt and reckless in our nation's history: lots of Americans are really happy with it.

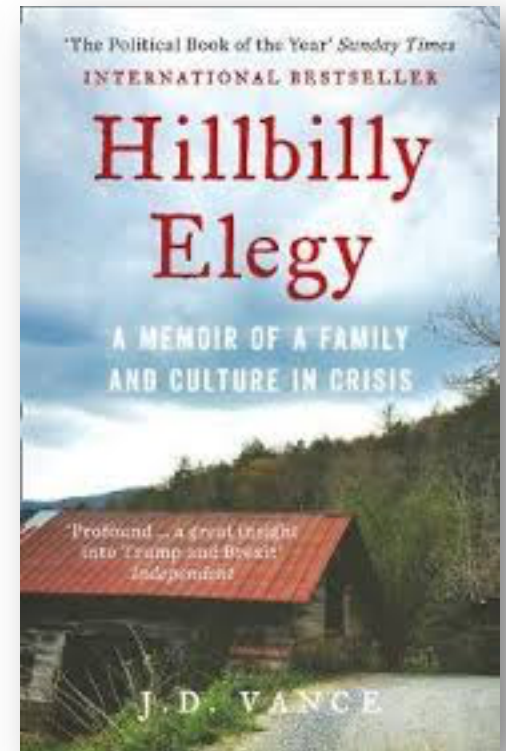

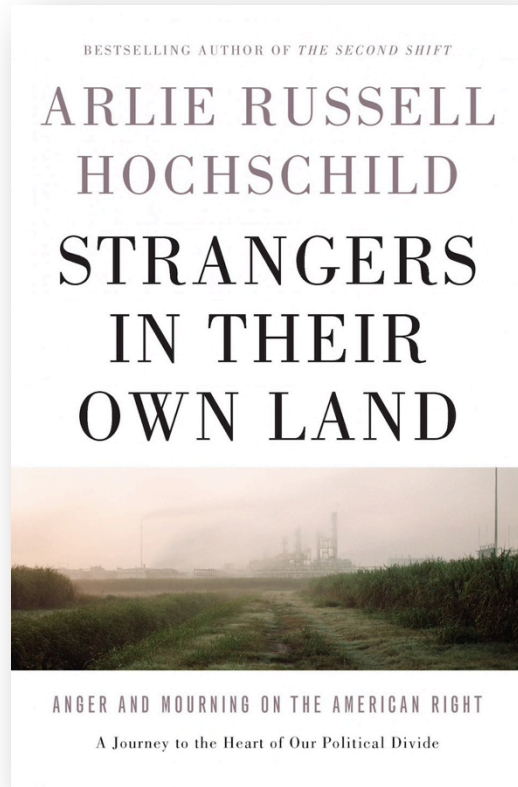

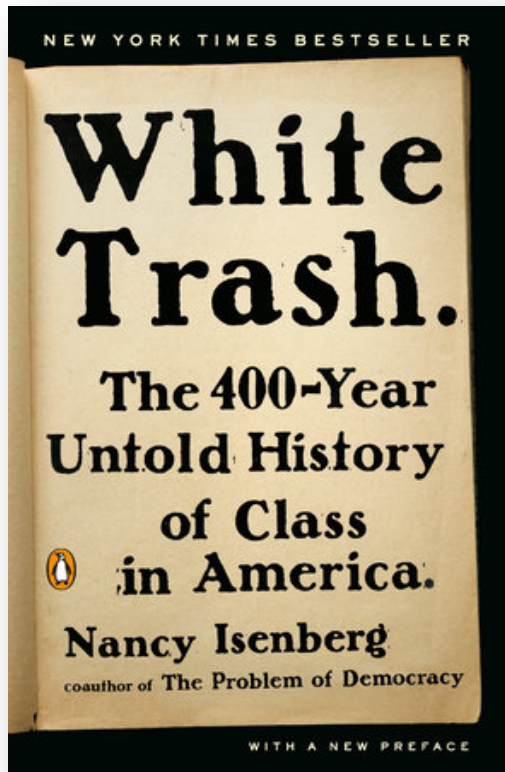

But they aren't necessarily pleased with the actual policies, tactics, or methods (the narrative goes) but with the results: undoing everything Barack Obama did.

That is all that matters to them.

It's the reason they voted the way they did.

It's the reason their support is steadfast through affairs and cabinet implosions and human rights disasters and wanton ignorance.

It's the reason they will keep themselves tethered to him even if he is proven to have leveraged our very nation with the Russian government.

+ BOWLING WITH TRUMP: ECONOMIC ANXIETY, RACIAL IDENTIFICATION, AND WELL-BEING IN THE 2016 PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION (Fabian, Breunig, DeNeve, 2020)

Worldview defense theories argue that a natural, often subconscious response to anxiety is to bolster feelings of in-group affiliation.

Self-determination theory similarly predicts that people feeling mentally unwell will seek to improve their sense of relatedness.

People with local, ready-to-hand sources of relatedness will be buffered against anxiety. However, those without immediate access to in-groups that can provide relatedness may reach for salient and accessible but broader in-groups, such as racial and national identity. Trump might appeal to such individuals with his America First, pro-white, and anti-immigrant rhetoric and policy positions. We therefore hypothesize that Trump should be more electorally successful in counties with high rates of worry and low rates of relatedness.

We further hypothesize that an interaction between racial animus and relatedness should swamp the effect of racial animus alone, as this would indicate that rising racial sentiment reflected people seeking relatedness.

It's a unseasonably breezy Monday evening in January, and a handful of volunteers from Population Connection Action Fund have boarded the blue line at Foggy Bottom toward Largo Town Center. On the crowded Metro car, they wear t-shirts that say, "OUR FIGHT, OUR RIGHT, OUR FUTURE" and carry posters criticizing President Trump's reinstatement of the so-called "global gag rule," a policy that blocks federal funding to organizations that provide abortion counseling to women abroad.

There's barely a day that goes by in Trump-era DC without an organized protest of some sort, often marked by clever signs and rallying cries. But what happens when these protests become so commonplace that people stop paying attention?

Tonight, the folks at Population Connection don't plan to gather a large group to protest Trump's "Global gag rule," nor do they have any chants planned. Instead, they're trying the hottest new form of dissent in the city: projecting their message directly onto the Trump International Hotel.

The failure to nominate black or minority actors in 2016 led to a furious backlash, with film stars boycotting the ceremony.

Armando Iannucci himself noted that the reasons for the diversity of the casting were twofold. Firstly, as is now the custom, to broaden the range of actors used, but also to be true to the original novel.

When Dev Patel asked Iannucci whether he was making a social or political point – making the Copperfields Indian or Pakistani immigrants, for instance – Iannucci responded, ‘Although it’s set in 1840, for the people in the film it’s the present day. And it’s an exciting present.’

Trump and McConnell's marriage of convenience seeks its ultimate prize.

In this March 26, 2019, file photo, President Donald Trump speaks to the press alongside Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell as he arrives on Capitol Hill before joining Senate Republicans for lunch.

(CNN) — No one would ever say that the political marriage between Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell and President Donald Trump is a match made in heaven. It's nothing like that, and nothing near love.

It's more an arranged marriage between two cold-blooded politicians whose goals often coincide. Nothing more, nothing less.

Except now, the men need each other, maybe more than ever -- and each will do whatever it takes to get another conservative on the Supreme Court.

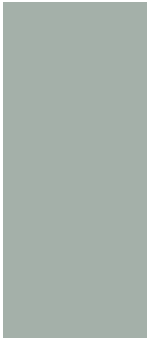

For Trump, the rationale is simple: He believes the debate over replacing the late Justice Antonin Scalia helped him win in 2016. And he is convinced it will help him again, although he may be very wrong about that.
